

Partnerships across internal/external boundaries

In the modern organisational world, development of productive relationships all across our business is being identified as much more important than design of structures and systems for communication.

Seamless internal collaboration

Customers and key stakeholders don't really care about your organization structure! And in the 2020's, you just can't afford for your different sites, organisation units and structures to slow down collaboration and delay important work. The good news is that your people will build partnerships naturally – given the right encouragement.

Break the mould of failing external partnerships

We know that so many partnerships fail to deliver – and companies repeatedly create new processes and reinforce contracts, to lower the risks. These things may all be important, but it's building trust and awareness of differences that's so often missing. Creating a 'one-team' approach pays real dividends.

What can you do?

Sending the right messages across the organisation is critical, backed up with developing the skills to work across traditional barriers

How we can help to get you there:

- ✓ Guidance for leading this change
- ✓ Facilitating extended teams
- ✓ Coaching for cross-function leaders
- ✓ Helping internal alliance managers